

Creating Inclusive Spaces for All

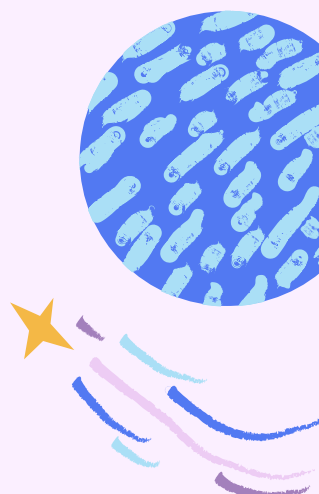

Olivia Slatter is an award-winning advocate, speaker, and creative, and the founder of Itsoliviasworld — a platform dedicated to autism and disability awareness with a special focus on the arts. Diagnosed as autistic, Olivia uses her own lived experiences to educate, inspire, and open up conversations that challenge stereotypes and promote true inclusion.

Her journey has taken her from grassroots community work to national recognition, earning her the prestigious Princess Diana Award for her outstanding contribution to society. Olivia collaborates with schools, organisations, and cultural institutions, delivering talks, workshops, and creative projects that empower both disabled and non-disabled people to better understand one another.

Passionate about the arts as a tool for change, Olivia works alongside actors, musicians, and creative professionals to highlight the talents of neurodivergent and disabled individuals. She has spoken at major events, participated in documentary projects, and partnered with inclusive agencies to push for more representation on stage and screen.

Through Itsoliviasworld, Olivia continues to advocate for accessibility, acceptance, and equal opportunities, building a future where difference is celebrated and everyone's story is valued.
